run at the sound of the horn to avoid being run over. On the contrary chauffeurs are under legal obligation to avoid accidents by carc in controlling and directing their juggernauts, not by noisy, peremptory orders to clear the track. Unfortunately neither chauffeurs nor wayfarers know the law.

The other law which in my opinion should be altered or abrogated is that of contributory negligence. At present, people injured in street accidents have prove entire freedom from negligence on their part.

In many of the States the rule as to contributory negligence has been abrogated in cases arising under the Workmen's Compensation law. Workmen are compensated for injuries received in the course of their employment notwithstanding their own negligence in contributing to the accident through which they are injured.

This should be applied as the rule in all run over cases. Compel owners of autos to pay damages in all cases, shutting out the defence of contributory negligence.
